

IronPort Turns to Requisite Technology to Integrate Partners with Customer Relationship Management System

Chicago, Jun. 20, 2006 – Requisite Technology Inc., a leading provider of channel management, eCommerce and master data management solutions, announced that IronPort, the leader in gateway security, has extended its contract for the Requisite Technology demand chain management solution. IronPort needed a solution that could capture and track leads driven by its partner community, eliminate conflict using deal registration, and deliver this information into IronPort's customer relationship management (CRM) system.

“Requisite Technology has the functionality to support our external partners,” said Steve Shray, senior vice president of operations at IronPort Systems. “They have proven expertise in helping companies manage and communicate with their partner community and have demonstrated how to efficiently and effectively integrate with existing CRM systems.”

“For companies with complex sales channels, CRM solutions do not provide the necessary tools to support business partners’ sales efforts,” said Nancy Koenig, executive vice president of operations for Requisite Technology. “Requisite Technology offers a best-of-breed channel management solution. We have been helping companies since 1996 leverage their partner relationships to grow sales.”

The Requisite Technology Channel Management solution enables companies to deeply integrate with existing salesforce automation systems and effectively enter, track, and pull partner sales leads.
